THE CONSTITUTION AND THE SUPREME COURT

GENTLEMEN:

The concluding article by C. Mervyn Maxwell on "The Constitution and the Supreme Court" was very well done.

If they are available, I would very much appreciate the back issues of LIBERTY containing prior installments of this series.—BRUCE BAYER, Attorney at Law, Scottsdale, Arizona.

WE'RE CONFUSED?

DEAR SIR:

It seems to me that we should at least consider the tenets of a religion before we glibly assert that that religion should be separate from the state.

Now many a Baptist regards complete immersion in baptism as a part of his religion, many a Methodist regards belief in the Holy Spirit as a part of his religion, and many a Presbyterian regards personal prayer in his home as a part of his religion. Well, I regard as my religion my belief that God's will should be done in all things. It follows that I should regard as part of my religion my belief that God would have government organized on a just and proper basis.

I feel that recent Supreme Court decisions in this area advance the organization of government on a just and proper basis, therefore I regard support of the decisions as a part of my religion.

So now I read that LIBERTY is also supporting this establishment of religion in our Government. Though I welcome support, I must confess that I am wondering if LIBERTY is not just a bit confused on these matters.—ROBERT E. CRENSHAW, Laurens, S.C.

[We must be. We don't know where we did it if we did. In fact, we're not even sure, after rereading your letter, what we did!—ED.]

LIBERTY

Liberty is a necessity for all men. But liberty will not maintain itself. Men must join their interests to preserve it. Make LIBERTY: A MAGAZINE OF RELIGIOUS FREEDOM your agent in fighting for freedom.
